Your child's routines, and why they are important

Why are routines important?

- Routines are vital for children to feel safe and secure. For most of us, including adults, fear of the unknown is one of the biggest fears there is.
- Children are constantly facing the unknown with changes to their world which range from tiny (new vegetables on their plate, growing out of favourite clothes) to huge (moving house, new school, parents separating.)
- Children are more able to cope with these constant changes and challenges if they happen within a consistent and secure routine.
- Routines also help children prepare for later life. They teach them to be organised and disciplined with things like homework, they develop good personal hygiene routines and they promote good eating and sleeping habits which are vital for good health

Routines can support a happier and less stressful family life.

When children are in a consistent routine it eliminates the need for the parents to be the 'bad guy' by constantly nagging their child to do something.

Any request stops being something unreasonable in the child's eyes, as every task (brushing teeth, tidying up etc.) just becomes 'what we do' at this time of day.

Routines also help children to become more independent and take responsibility for themselves.

Children love the feeling of being in control of themselves and routines mean that they know what is expected of them and can carry out these tasks independently.

Routines can support transitions as children know what positive things they have to look forward to.

Routines help parents be more consistent which is so important for managing children's boundaries and behaviour.

Routines help children get into a good schedule for getting to bed, which means more sleep and a happier, more co-operative child.

Routines can help eliminate the rush and stress of getting out of the house in the morning with children, bags, lunches, P.E. kit etc.!

A visual routine can be really useful if your child finds certain times of the day difficult, such as: getting ready for school, completing homework or getting ready for bed.

7am		Wake up and get out of bed
7.15		Choose your breakfast and eat it.
7.45		Brush teeth and wash face
7.50		Get dressed
8.00		Brush hair
8.05		Pack bags and get lunchbox and drink
8.15		Get shoes / coat on
8.20		Walk to school

You might like to think about making a chart like this with your child. You could sit down together and decide what things need to be done each
